Brien Lundin, in the February, 2015, edition of the Gold Newsletter, refreshes his buy of Altius Minerals Ltd., recently $13.89. Mr. Lundin said buy Altius at $2.25 in July, 2003, and at $3.70 in April, 2005. He then said take some profits -- sell half, perhaps -- in January, 2006, at $4.95. Assuming a $1,000 investment for each of the two buys, selling half at $4.95 would have yielded a profit of $722. Mr. Lundin said buy five more times between March, 2006, and October, 2014, at prices ranging from $4.75 to $11.49. Assuming a $1,000 investment for each of the five buys, and taking into consideration the remaining $1,000 investment after the half-sale, the $6,000 investment is now worth $14,931. The newsletter editor says the company has a royalty portfolio that drives its cash flow, making it well-positioned to capitalize on the global scramble for scarce resources. Mr. Lundin tells his readers that as the United States and Europe compete with Asia to buy commodities, the long-term prospects for companies such as Altius is bright. He also praises the company's "drum-tight" share structure, noting that it has fewer than 35 million shares outstanding. The gold bug tells his readers to buy the stock on weakness.
