Douglas Casey, writing in the July 1 issue of his International Speculator, says Altius Minerals is a buy at $3.30. Mr. Casey tipped Altius a "strong buy" in April at $3.44, in August, 2003, at $2.09, and in September, 2001, at 51 cents. He says the head of Altius, Brian Dalton, is considered by many to be one of the smartest young talents in the mining business. It is hard not to agree when you consider the company has about 39 projects in its portfolio, he says. "Each and every one of those is like a lottery ticket; the more you own, the better your odds of success." As a backstop for the company's price, it has a 0.225-per-cent net smelter royalty on Inco's Voisey's Bay deposit. The cumulative royalty payments to Altius from this royalty alone should conservatively work out to be on the order of $65-million or $2.80 per share -- not all that far off its current share price. In the category of upside, drills are currently turning on the company's Rambler copper-gold project in Newfoundland, with the entire tab being picked up by a U.K.-based venture capital group. Rambler is an old high-grade copper and gold mine and current drilling is designed to establish mineralization.
